Will Cash Be Around Forever?

I was reading an article today that was talking about the end of cash! I know for me if there was an end to cash my budget would go through the window! I feel in less control of money if I can't see it...
When I did operate with just a card, I always found that I would just keep spending until the "declined" message came up. I think that by using cards, you never really remember what your actual balance is. Where as with cash you can see it every time you open your wallet to spend.
What do you think? How would you go in a cashless society? How would this affect your budget? What price will you pay for convenience?

After having my wallet stolen I live without cash as much as possible. I round down my starting balance and round up the amount I withdraw keeping tabs with a note pad. I usually always end up with money leftover each week. I just wish I could remember to put that extra bit into another account so it would build up!
